macrofossil evidence of early sporophyte stages of a new ... - upon leaf impressions, records early sporophyte growth stages. the specimens occur at discrete levels in clay pits at dinmore, and the different leaf stages present suggest that they represent colonies of young submerged plants, mats of floating leaves, or a mixed assemblage of both. the leaf life-cycle-generation-specific developmental processes are ... - early development, which begin with either a symmetric or an asymmetric division of the initial cell, respectively. a mutant, immediate upright (imm), was isolated that exhibited several characteristics typical of the gametophyte during the early development of the sporophyte generation. some features of the organization of the sporophyte of ... - early cellular organization of the embryo ... figures of a number of embryos of e. arvense in various stages of development are shown in fig. 2 a-g. it is significant to observe how closely they conform to the ... the prothallial nutrition of the young sporophyte falls naturally into three stages, the nutrition of the proembryo, of the embryo ... early evolution of the vascular plant body plan — the ... - development with genetic/regulatory origins, thus it is not testable. by proposing that the vegetative organ of the polysporangiophyte sporophyte is a (leafless) stem, this hypothesis suggests homology of the early polysporan-giophyte sporophyte with a modern tracheophyte stem. this view corresponds to a downward outlook on evol- eastern hemlock growth cycle and early years - the early stages of ... development of cone and seed the nucleus of each cell of the parent tree or sporophyte has two sets ... divisions;
